

Supporting Information for

The distribution of faecal contamination in an urbanized tropical lake and incidence of acute diarrheal disease

Anas Abdulaziz,^{1,2,*} Shubha Sathyendranath^{3,4} Syam Kumar Vijayakumar,¹ Nandini Menon,⁵ Grinson George,⁶ Gemma Kulk,^{3,4} Devika Raj,¹ Kiran Krishna,^{1,2} Ranith Rajamohanpillai,⁵ Balu Tharakan,¹ Chekidhenkuzhiyil Jasmin,¹ Jithin Vengalil,¹ Trevor Platt³,

¹CSIR-National Institute of Oceanography, Regional Centre Kochi, Kochi- 682018, India

²Academy of Scientific and Innovative Research (AcSIR), Ghaziabad – 201002, India

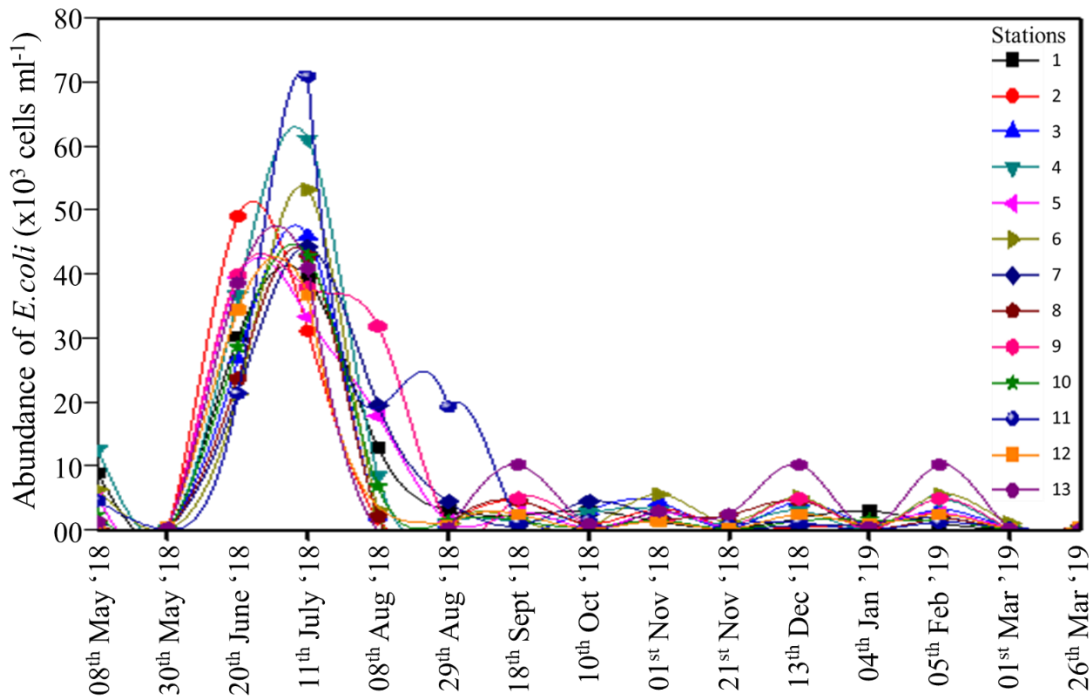

³Plymouth Marine Laboratory, Plymouth, Devon PL1 3DH, UK

⁴National Centre for Earth Observation, Plymouth Marine Laboratory, Devon PL1 3DH, UK

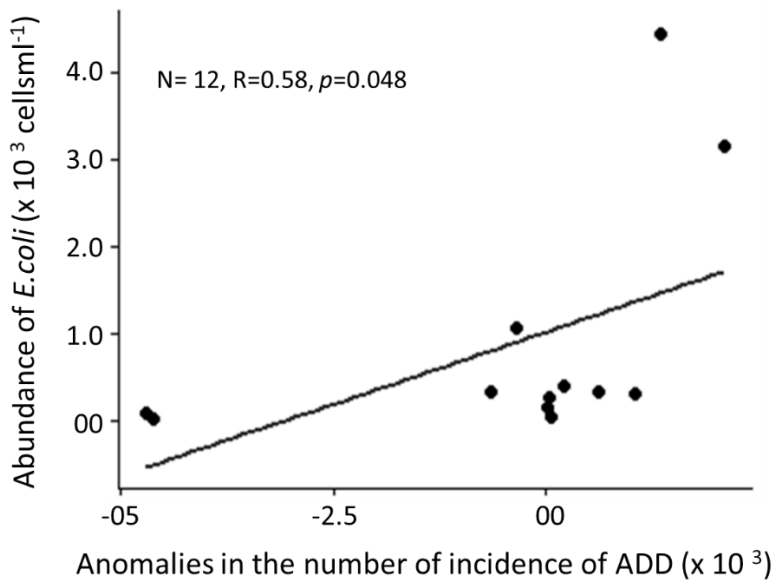

⁵Nansen Environmental Research Centre India, KUFOS Amenity Centre, Kochi- 682506, India

⁶ICAR-Central Marine Fisheries Research Institute, Kochi - 682 018, India

*Corresponding author: anas@nio.org

Supplementary figure 1: Spatio-temporal variation in the distribution of E. coli in the water column of Vembanad lake

Supplementary figure 2: Spearman's rank correlation showing the correlation of monthly average abundance of E. coli in the water column of Vembanad lake with anomalies in the incidence of ADD